on of Arthur Spring in Philadel-

Convision of Arthur Spring in Philadelbits, for the Murder of Ellen Lyach and Hasors Shaw.

[From the Philadelphia Bulletin, April 7.]

When the Court reassembled yesterday, afternoon, several witnesses were examined, but their testimony that an one facts were clinited. Several witnesses for the defence were also examined, but their testimony amounted to little. Ser. Mann then addressed the jury for the Commonwashth. He was followed by fir. Doran for the prisoner, and Mr. Reed closed the case. At about 11 o'clock at night Judge Kelley charged the jury, and they then retired to deliberate on their verdict.

As the trial was drawing to a close, the most intense excitement prevailed, not only within, but among the crowd outside of the court house. The number around the building was immense, and the business of the Court was more than once interrupted by gangs of thoughtless persons climbing up to the windows from Sixth street, the laughing or talking aloud. Several were brought into court by the Marshal's officers, and placed is the front of the prisoner's deck, until the court was about to adjourn. After a reprimand from Judge Kelley for their thoughtles mess, for such their conduct appeared to be, when explained, they were parmitted to depart.

On his way to the prison. last night, or rather this morning, for it was after 12 o'clock, Spring laughed with the officers, and felt, or pretended to feel, a sort of asaurance that he wo lid be acquitted, and so expressed himself. It was rumored at 12 o'clock last night, that the jury stood 11 to 1, and that the one was quibbling apan's matters which had little or nothing to do with the guilt or innocence of the prisoner.

This morning the prisoner was brought from prison about 9 o'clock. By that hour a great crowd had assembled, having obtained a knowledge of the rumors of the previous night. There was a quiet but intense excitement pervanding the mass. Compressed lips and contracted brows indicaved that vengeance was slimbering theen, and only waiting for o and more than one person was heard to heary the answered that the prisoner was "Guilty of murder in the first derea."

The prisoner then called singly, and each answered that the prisoner was "Guilty of murder in the first derea."

The prisoner then called Mr. Doran to him, and stated something in a low voice, which we could not hear.

Mr. Doran came forward, and said—May it please your Honers, the prisoner. Arthur Spring, desires to make a statement to the Court.

The judges consulted together about the matter, when Judge Kelley addressed the jurore, who had just returned their verdict, in substance, as follows:—

JUDGE KELLEY'S SPIREH TO THIS JURY.

Gentlemen of the Jury—You have now closed a painful duty, and have finished it in a manner altogether satisfactory to the Court You have no doubt discharged it conscientionly. I thank you for the inferent you have manifested to obtain all the information possible in reference to the subject before you, and for the patient attention you have given to the testimony and the law bearing upon it. Santched as you were from your business to undertake the determination of the guilt or innocence of the prisoner, you could not but find the duty an unpleasant one. As a general thing, jurors ought not to be thanked for the mere performance of their duty, but in this case, and under the circumstances which brought you kee against your will, I feel it to be my duty to thank you. I know that citizeus are adverse to sitting for the purpose of discharging so disagreeable a duty; but it is one which cannot be avoided. You are discharged for to day.

Mr. Reed, the District Attorney, now rose, and said that he hoped no such indulgence would be granted as that saked for by the prisoner. The proper time had not come, and a statement at this time can do no good. It is unseemly and inappropriate, and he hoped it would not be allowed. He objected to it as wholly irregular.

Mr. Beran said—He hoped the Court will hear you. Arthur Spring, when he had not no my the same of the prisoner while O'Blare came to the door. I said was the man. They book me, but did not tell me it was for the number. I did not do it, not had I hand in it. I did not tell the money. My son did not the crime. I will go back to New York, if you have no objections, and All the latter part was said in a very excelled manner, with his arm uplitted, and his eyes turned upwards.

JUDGE KELLEY'S BRIFY TO THE FISHONER!
